Reason unclear in removal of Sex Offender board execs

Massachusetts. Two top executives were suddenly and inexplicably dismissed from their duties.

Questions linger following the sudden dismissal on Wednesday of two top executives heading up the Massachusetts Sex Offender Registry, as state officials declined to give a reason for the oustings.

Saundra Edwards was relieved of duty after seven years as board chairwoman, and Executive Director Jeanne Holmes was placed on administrative leave.

When asked why the women were let go, Executive Office of Public Safety and Security Spokesman Terrel Harris said, "the [Sex Offender Registry Board's] decision is considered a personnel matter and we'll have no further comment."

Neither Edwards nor Holmes responded to requests for comment on the matter.

Public Safety and Security Secretary Andrea Cabral announced in a press release issued Wednesday that Anne Conners, an investigator for the Department of Early Education and Care, will replace Edwards. Kevin Hayden, the board's general counsel, will serve as its interim executive director, Cabral said.

Gov. Deval Patrick's office did not respond to a request for comments on the dismissal of Edwards and Holmes, though Cabral touted the achievements of their replacements.

"[Conners] knows and understands the complexities of the criminal justice system as well as the policies and regulations related to [Sex Offender Registry Information]," said Cabral.

"In the course of investigating a number of high-profile cases, [Conners] has worked closely with the [board], local law enforcements agencies, DCF and the District Attorneys' Offices for many years. She will hit the ground running."

Gov. Deval Patrick appointed Edwards to board chairwoman in 2007. She previously worked as a prosecutor for the Plymouth County District Attorney's office. He hired Holmes shortly after.

Conners will hire a permanent replacement for Holmes, according to Cabral.

Quoted

"I look forward to the opportunity to Chair the Sex Offender Registry Board, and I will work diligently to continue their mission of educating and protecting the people of the commonwealth."

At a glimpse

The Sex Offender Registry maintains a database of convicted sex offenders and classifies each one by the danger they potentially pose to the public.

- The goal of the registry, according to its website, is to "educate the public and to prevent further victimization."
- There were 11,307 sex offenders in Massachusetts in 2013, according to the most recent data provided by the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children.

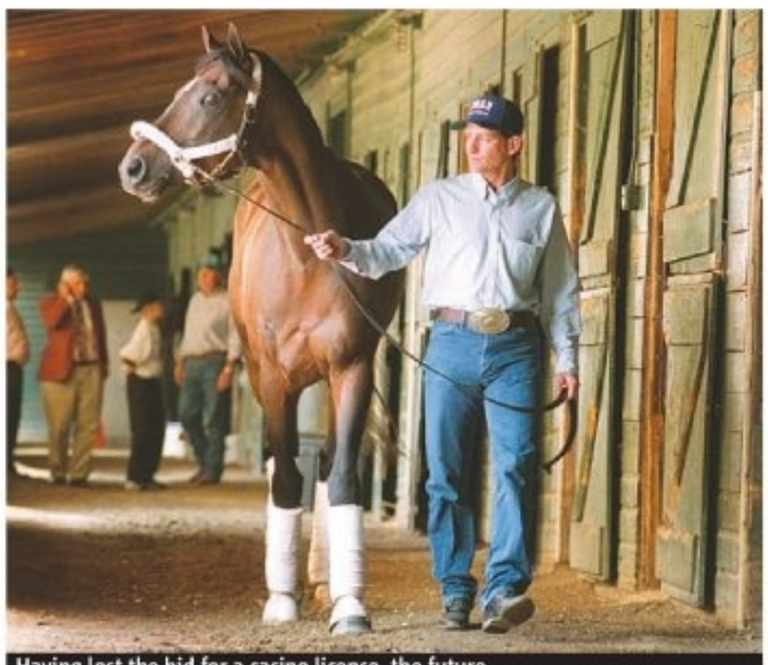
East Boston group outlines vision for Suffolk Downs



Having lost the bid for a casino license, the future is uncertain for Suffolk Downs. / GETTY IMAGES

With the ink barely dry on the Everett casino approval, an East Boston-based coalition of urban planners is already chiming in about the future of Suffolk Downs.

It's a future that is shrouded in doubt and gloom now that there will be no casino coming to the 161-acre site that straddles the Revere-Eastie line and is home to an historic horse track. Earlier this week, Suffolk Downs indicated the track will be closing down now that there is no casino to pull the operation out of the red.

The East Boston group, which is spearheaded by former state Transportation Secretary James Aloisi and includes various community stakeholders, unrolled a "vision statement" on Wednesday that says the site is ripe for a mix of housing and commercial development. It calls for green redevelopment, noting the presence of an international airport, three tunnels and major highway in the area.

The group contends the site, with its Blue Line access and proximity to Logan, downtown and the Innovation District in South Boston, offers "a wealth of development possibilities beyond a casino."

Any development, according to the group, should be rooted in sustainable job creation and offer a broad spectrum of jobs, something a casino would not do.

The proposed Suffolk Downs casino was never very popular in Eastie. Last fall, voters there rejected such an idea. Aloisi, for one, stressed the potential for "21st century jobs" for the site.

"I believe we're trying to begin the conversation," said Aloisi. "That conversation was premature until this (casino) issue got resolved."

Sun Boxes to sing soothing sounds

Copley. A sun-powered installation will be in Boston throughout the weekend.

From today through Sunday, pedestrians passing through a few Boston public spaces will find themselves in the midst of solar-powered celestial sounds.

Twenty Sun Boxes will be placed at Copley Square today, each powered by solar panels. Each box plays a different looped guitar note continuously, and collectively they play a B-flat chord.

Arkansas-based sound artist Craig Colorusso, who created the boxes in 2009 before a trip to a sun-soaked Nevada desert, said the sounds emitted by the boxes tend to relax visitors.

"No one ever leaves more stressed out than when they get there — there's a soothing quality," said Colorusso, a former Hingham resident. "The great thing about [the installation] is that you're a part of it. You decide how far you want to go."

Colorusso has traveled across the country with his installation, which has been temporarily placed in 18 states and 35 cities in a variety of settings such as state parks, universities, museums and festivals.

"Boston's attention to and evolving interest in public art and the variety of welcoming public spaces is what makes this city the ideal location for this work," a city spokeswoman said in a press release.

The Sun Boxes will be on display between 10:30 a.m. and sundown at Copley Square today, at Dewey Square on Friday, at Boston Common on Saturday and in front of The Children's Museum on Sunday.

"Boston is such a green city and has all these beautiful parks, I think it's a great fit," said Colorusso.

Quoted

"It's not that painstaking to go outside and just listen, or look. I mean we live in paradise. I'm just trying to be part of it as much as I can."

1 Restaurants

New restaurants Legal Crossing and The Merchant have recently opened, and Caffe Nero serves coffee and lattes outside on Washington Street.

2 Temple Place

Older favorites Stoddard's Pub and JM Curley have been drawing beer fans to Temple Place for a few years now, and soon a new 243-room boutique hotel will draw even more visitors to 59 Temple Place.

3 Formerly Filene's

For eight years, the old Filene's building in the heart of DTX stood vacant, until last month. In August, Havas Media moved into the newly renovated building, soon to be followed by Arnold Worldwide, Primark and Roche Bros., the only supermarket east of the Back Bay.

4 Millennium Tower

The former blight of downtown (that giant crater) is now filled in and growing tall to become the 60-story Millennium Tower, the tallest residential building in the city. The tower will bring more residents to DTX, in return filling in the vacant storefronts along Washington Street with new restaurants and retailers.

All of this growth is visibly obvious, but what might not be so obvious is that Downtown Crossing has already become a major hub for Boston-based consumer start-ups.

5 Bromfield Street

Location-based social media app CO Everywhere calls Bromfield Street home as does the video coaching app Ubersense. BlankLabel allows you to customize the perfect dress shirt either online or at their Bromfield Street shop.

7 Downtown

In the 1900s, DTX was Boston's hub for department store shopping with Jordan Marsh, Filene's and Filene's Basement.

Soon, DTX will once again become a hub for shopping, dining and tech.

Vikings co-owner admits 'mistake' on star Peterson

Endorsements. Nike suspends its contract with Peterson, one of its most marketable players.

Grievances against the NFL's response to domestic abuse cases gathered pace on Wednesday as the Minnesota Vikings acknowledged making a mistake with its treatment of star player Adrian Peterson and corporate sponsors joined the chorus of discontent with America's top sports league.

The Vikings on Wednesday issued the latest mea culpa from the NFL. A flurry of domestic violence cases has raised questions about the league's integrity and the leadership of commissioner Roger Goodell. Even members of Congress are speaking out.

The Vikings, which on Monday reactivated Peterson for this Sunday's NFL game following his indictment last week in Texas in a case involving his 4-year-old son, reversed course by placing him on a special exempt list that suspends him from all team activities.

"We made a mistake, and we needed to get this right," Vikings co-owner Zygi Wilf said at a news conference, adding that he and his brother, Vikings co-owner Mark Wilf, had listened to "our fans, the community and our sponsors."

The NFL called his suspension "a good decision." REUTERS

The Vikings will continue to pay the running back his full $11.75 million salary for this season. Team general manager Rick Spielman declined to say whether Peterson would play again this season. If Peterson's case goes to trial it would likely begin in 2015.

Apple Inc. is set to launch two new iPads and release the next version of its Mac operating system at its next event on Oct. 21, a Daily Dot report said, citing sources familiar with the matter.

The company plans to unveil the sixth generation of its iPad and the third edition of the iPad mini, as well as its operating system OS X Yosemite, which has undergone a complete visual overhaul, the Internet news website said.

Trudy Muller, a spokeswoman for Apple, declined to comment.

The iPad is expected to have a 9.7-inch screen, while the new version of the iPad mini will have a 7.9-inch screen, Bloomberg earlier reported, citing people familiar with the matter. REUTERS

Military action. Obama vows US will not fight another ground war in Iraq

President Obama / GETTY IMAGES

President Barack Obama vowed on Wednesday the United States will not fight another ground war in Iraq, seeking to reassure Americans about the level of U.S. involvement after a top general suggested combat troops could be deployed against Islamic State forces.

Obama stressed during a speech at MacDill Air Force Base in Tampa that airstrikes would be the central U.S. contribution to the fight against Islamic State, along with coordinating a coalition that he said now includes more than 40 countries.

Quoted

"I want to be clear. The American forces that have been deployed to Iraq do not and will not have a combat mission."

"We will train and equip our partners. We will advise them and we will assist them. We will lead a broad coalition of countries who have a stake in this fight," said Obama. REUTERS

After speech, ISIL wins new recruits

Islamic State has won new recruits in Syria since President Barack Obama signaled last week that air strikes against the group will be expanded from Iraq to its strongholds in northern and eastern Syria, a group monitoring the war said on Wednesday.

The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said 162 people had joined Islamic State training camps in Aleppo province since Sept. 10, when Obama said he would not hesitate to strike ISIL in Syria.

The new recruits do not represent a big increase in the size of IS, which is estimated at 20,000 to 30,000 fighters in Syria and Iraq. REUTERS

May the force be with you, Lena

Now that Lena Dunham's "Girls" co-star Adam Driver is set to be in the new "Star Wars" film, she's using the fact that she's never seen the famous franchise as leverage to get him to finally watch their HBO series — something Driver has been avoiding. "I've never actually seen 'Star Wars.' I understand that this is a huge cultural phenomenon, but I get none of the references," Dunham tells E! News. "Now I'm going to have to watch — to understand. Adam's never watched 'Girls' so we made a deal [that] I would watch 'Star Wars' if he watched 'Girls.'"

Travolta proud of 'Battlefield Earth'?

John Travolta doesn't seem too bothered about the pending lawsuit filed by his former pilot, Doug Gotterba, who claims he also had a six-year romantic relationship with the star. "This is every celebrity's Achilles heel. It's just about people wanting money," Travolta tells the Daily Beast. Yikes. I didn't realize Gotterba got around that much. Every celebrity? But there's a much more troubling revelation in this interview, and it has to do with "Battlefield Earth," about which Travolta has zero regrets. "Are you kidding? Why would I ever regret that?" Travolta asks, and while I'd be happy to explain, it seems his question is rhetorical. "I had the power to do whatever I wanted, and I chose to do a book that I thought was worthy of making into a movie," he says. "It's a beautiful film."

Nick Jonas ditches the purity ring

Nick Jonas is not so pure anymore — or at least he doesn't need a piece of jewelry to remind him to be. After years of rumors that he and brother Joe had dropped the pledges that go along with their purity rings, the 22-year-old JoBro now admits that he's stopped wearing it altogether. "This is real growth in me and not something I'm doing anymore," he tells the Huffington Post. "But I've got my set of values, things that are important to me now at this point in my life, and that's all that matters." That and not telling everyone that you're a virgin!

Sitting Shiva with Corey Stoll

Interview. The "House of Cards" star talks about making the unhappy "This Is Where I Leave You" characters fun.

Corey Stoll (with Tina Fey) is part of a bickering family in "This Is Where I Leave You," out Friday. / WARNER BROS. PICTURES

In director Shawn Levy's "This Is Where I Leave You," Corey Stoll plays the oldest of four adult children (the others are played by Jason Bateman, Tina Fey and Adam Driver) sitting Shiva for a week following the sudden death of their father and finding old and new reasons to be at each others' throats. The trick, according to Stoll? Making all that bickering endearing.

Being busy since leaving 'House of Cards'

"There's definitely times when it's hectic and you're jumping from one [project] to the other and you're having a lot more calls about scheduling than you'd like to. But I've also found some gaps, and I've taken some time. I think after you spend the vast majority of your career fighting just to be employed, to be in the incredibly lucky position to have to choose between projects and the chance to choose to take time off — you can definitely feel a sense that you just have to keep working and ride this wave, but I have taken a few little gaps off to just recharge."

Making beleaguered characters fun to spend time with

"There were some challenges, particularly with my character. There was a big backstory element to my character [in the novel] that didn't work in the storytelling [and] sort of changed the motivation for my character's attitude toward his siblings. So that was a challenge to motivate the rigidity and resentment that my character really holds on to throughout the film. A number of those things just have to be internal. There have to be secrets that I have, and then hopefully the audience can feel that my being such a joy-kill is for a good reason and not just because I'm an a—hole."

He's the only Jewish actor in the main cast

"Everyone assumes Adam Driver is Jewish. At least I did. I come from a similar background to these characters where it's completely secular. We definitely did the major holidays and things like that, but I wasn't bar mitzvahed. We would sit Shiva, but certainly not for seven days. And so I understand this particular conundrum of being Jewish but not religious, where you want to have that connection culturally. But maybe you don't feel as engaged religiously and you're finding a balance there."

Going Marvel

His 'Ant Man' villain

"Obviously, it's not like working on an indie film with a director with final cut, but all of my interactions with [director] Peyton [Reed] and with everybody over there have been so creatively minded. Everybody seems so on board with making these stories as emotionally rich and character-based as possible in the background of this spectacle. It feels like a good home for actors."

1 'A Walk Among the Tombstones' The "60-something Liam Neeson hurts people" cottage industry just keeps on going, though this one at least was made by Scott Frank, the talented screenwriter of "Out of Sight."

2 'The Maze Runner' The latest YA movie take on a book you've never heard of features a bunch of teens trying to get out of a maze.

3 'This Is Where I Leave You' A bunch of talented actors (Jason Bateman, Tina Fey and Jane Fonda among them) congregate for a bickering family movie that will almost assuredly go from bitter yuks to sentimental tears. The guy who made "Night at the Museum" directs.

4 'Tusk' He said he was retiring or something, but Kevin Smith instead made a movie about a psycho (Michael Parks) who kidnaps a podcaster (Justin Long) with the hopes of turning him into a walrus. Yes, you read that right.

5 'The Skeleton Twins' Kristen Wiig and Bill Hader team up to do a more serious kind of comedy, playing unhappy twins who reunite after both try suicide.

Dan Stevens bids adieu to Cousin Matthew

Interview. The former "Downton Abbey" star shows his range in "A Walk Among the Tombstones" and "The Guest."

Dan Stevens wanted a change, and he certainly got one. After quickly developing a devoted fan base as Matthew Crawley on "Downton Abbey," the actor was eager to shake things up. This week finds him as a vet with a deadly secret in the madcap action thriller "The Guest" (opening in limited release) and a troubled drug kingpin alongside Liam Neeson in "A Walk Among the Tombstones" — so yeah, pretty different.

'Tombstones' is pretty dark, while The Guest' is lighter.
When I sat down with ["The Guest" director] Adam [Wingard], it was very quickly established that we had the same twisted sense of humor, but also the same desire to entertain. As soon as we realized that we both really passionately loved the movie "Big Trouble in Little China," we knew we were off to a good start.

A classic, to be sure.
One of the many things we like about that film is the amount of fun Kurt Russell looks like he's having. We were looking to capture some of that passion and enthusiasm. Growing up in England, we were steeped in American action thrillers and horror movies, and it's a kind of film that they don't really make in England. There's a nod to it in Simon Pegg and Nick Frost's film "Hot Fuzz," where they acknowledge that as Brit fanboys we don't get to make those kinds of movies.

Something happened in the last 10 years or so where everyone decided actions movies had to be serious.
Right. It's interesting to watch these cinematic shifts in terms of how we approach things like violence. Even the Bond films have lost one or two of their great quips and one-liners.

It seems like they managed to sneak some of that back in with 'Skyfall.'
It did, it did. I was very pleased to see Albert Finney say, "Welcome to Scotland" with a shotgun in his hands. That was bloody great.

Former glories

Back to the 'Abbey'

You mentioned you were looking for things that are different from what you've done, and these two roles are pretty far from Cousin Matthew on 'Downton Abbey.'
It's easy to fall into one track of work — especially in England where we make a lot of costume dramas. So inevitably, as an actor, it's there that you end up in a lot of costume dramas. It does take an active push to step outside of that comfort zone and try something a little bit wild and different.

Did you feel like there was a kind of shadow cast by that character that you had to try to get out from under?
Well, not really. I hope people will watch both these movies and not see a trace of him. That's not to put that character down at all, it's just that was a character on a very particular TV show, and these are roles in very different movies. When you are in people's living rooms every Sunday night, it's a different relationship that you have with your audience. Actually having it piped into your living room TV on a regular basis, and that real kind of institutional feel of Sunday night TV, it's a different relationship.

Pejic says SRS is "an evolution and not a transformation." /PROVIDED

Interview. Andreja Pejic: 'It's an evolution, not a transformation'

"I feel 100 percent complete," says Andreja Pejic. "It's about proving my position in the industry and speaking out for equal rights in fashion for transgender models, because it doesn't exist right now."

It's a socially charged mission statement that you wouldn't typically expect to hear from a model. However, there's nothing typical about Andreja Pejic.

Her white blonde hair, full lips and high cheekbones all exemplify the checklist of model attributes. But it's the fact that she has just undergone male-to-female sex reassignment surgery and spoken out about it that makes Pejic unique.

"I have a level of social responsibility, and that's one of the reasons for coming out," she explains.

It's an incredibly brave decision to make, considering that there is still antipathy targeted at the transgender community.

There's also the matter of her very successful career as an androgynous male model for fashion houses such as Jean Paul Gaultier and Marc Jacobs.

Her agents warned that transitioning would destroy her career. That, however, didn't sway Pejic's decision. "I'm very proud of my career, but it got to a point where I needed to complete my dream and feel comfortable in my body. There was no way I was going to hide this," she says. RICHARD PECKETT

The documentary

Raising awareness

Pejic is spreading awareness through an autobiographical book, which will be published in Australia early next year, and a documentary of her sex reassignment surgery.

Although she was originally unsure about filming her transition, her filmmaker friend Eric Miclette encouraged her, saying, "You need to capture this, you'll regret it if you don't. It's a unique story and it can help a lot of young people." The film, "Andrej(a)," is looking to raise $200,000 on Kickstarter.

Quoted

"I've been off the dating scene for a while, but I'm open to love. ... I used to think that love wasn't something I was deserving of, but now I have enough pride to say that it's exactly what I deserve." Pejic

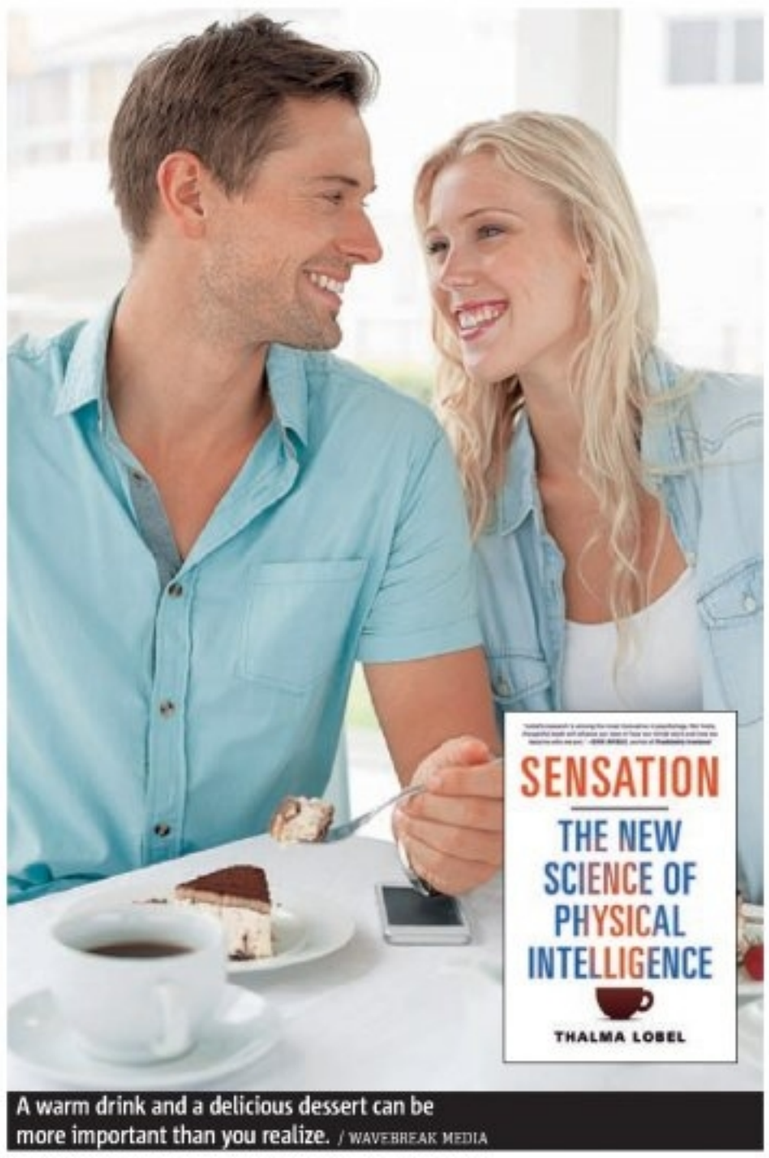
How a hot cup of coffee can help you fall in love



A warm drink and a delicious dessert can be more important than you realize. / WAVEBREAK MEDIA

Human nature. A behavioral expert tells us how daters can tip the scales in their favor.

Picture your idea of a nice first date. Is it dinner and a movie? A visit to an interesting museum exhibit?

Instead, an expert on human behavior suggests you get a hot cup of coffee and maybe a freshly made dessert.

"If you're going on a date, you want the other person to think you are warm," says Thalma Lobel, a professor of psychology at Tel Aviv University and author of the book "Sensation: The New Science of Physical Intelligence." She notes that the environment around us has more of an impact on human behavior than we realize. We asked Lobel for some scientifically proven dating tips for singles.

Visit a bakery

People tend to love the aroma of freshly baked bread or pastries and react accordingly.

"I suggest maybe having dessert in a bakery after dinner," she advises. There's even an added bonus: Pleasant scents are said to help minimize awkward situations.

Add a touch of red to your wardrobe

"The movie industry has known for years that using red lipstick or a red dress signals sexuality," notes Lobel.

You don't need to deck yourself out in red from head to toe. Something as simple as adding a red scarf or some red accessories should do the trick.

Look around

Be aware of the impact of your surroundings

"The whole idea of the book is to examine how our physical sensations influence our lives," says Lobel. "The temperature of the things we touch, the textures, the colors. All of these affect the way we perceive the other person." A famous study showed that people holding hot cups of coffee in their hands tended to think more fondly of those they were meeting with because of the power of holding something warm, even for just a moment.

While warm drinks inspire friendly feelings in people, an iced coffee or soda can literally put a chill on your evening, Lobel says.

Sit in comfy seats

Don't forget the impact of soothing textures when picking a place. "If you touch something soft, you actually feel softer toward the other person," says Lobel.

Use a bit of caution

Of course, Lobel points out, red lipstick or a really delicious latte isn't going make a relationship that was never meant to be develop into a lifelong commitment. But the right environment could make a tiny yet crucial difference that takes a budding romance to the next level. "It might just tip the scale," Lobel says.

Bonus question

Some felines seem to struggle with a cat flap on the door, so could this food dispenser not be a whisker too advanced for some of our pets?
We did user testing. We had around 30 cats and they were all — even the shy participants — able to use it by the second day.

A sensor on Bistro will make sure none of your cats are eating your other cats' portions. / INDIEGOGO

Fat cats? Not with this contraption

Feline friends. Bistro uses state-of-the-art technology to keep your buddy fighting fit.

Facial recognition technology could make greedy fat cats a thing of the past. Bistro, a new food dispenser masterminded by Taiwanese company 42Ark, monitors and informs owners as to the eating habits of their feline friends. A built-in camera at the front of the gadget identifies your pet, while weight sensors located underneath the animal and bowl calculate the exact quantity of food intake. The information is then sent via home Wi-Fi to a smartphone app, where owners can check out their cat's diet history, get a health analysis report and even watch their pet in real time. The brain behind Bistro Mu-Chi Sung explains how his calorie-cutting device — funded through crowd-sourcing platform Indiegogo — will cull the rise in cat obesity.

This all sounds very Big Brother (beware the hand that feeds you). How did you come up with the idea for the device?
The whole thing started when I found my cat, Momo, who had developed pancreatic cancer, lying paralyzed on the floor. For a long time, I was putting food and water in her bowl but had no idea whether she was eating it properly. It wasn't until I started hand-feeding her that I realized that she still had an appetite. It turns out that my other cats had been eating Momo's food. If I had noticed as soon as she had stopped eating, then she needn't have experienced any pain.

So are all your cats using the Bistro now?
Not right now because there is only one working prototype in our office.

It sounds a bit like a fitness band for a cat. Is it not a bit over-the-top?
We all need to measure and quantify our lives. It's life-logging for your cat in terms of weight, appetite, hydration and ultimately wellbeing.

Isn't it possible that message alerts about your cat's health might cause unnecessary paranoia?
I don't think it would cause concern. You would only see the update warning if there is a sudden change in your cat's behavior.

For the Cambridge University grads Clean Bandit, it's all porn parties and DIY videos.

Clean Bandit play a sold-out show on Saturday at The Paradise (967 Comm. Ave., Boston). / PROVIDED

A CLEAN BREAK

Clean Bandit may identify themselves as an electronic chamber music quartet, but these Brits who gave us the infectious single, "New Eyes," aren't as stodgy as their genre of choice might imply.

"We all shout some Spice Girl lyrics before we go on-stage," says violin player Milan Neil Amin-Smith, during a chat backstage at Latitude festival in Suffolk, England.

These University of Cambridge graduates — Grace Chatto (cello and vocals), brothers Jack (bass guitar and keyboard) and Luke Patterson (drums) and Amin-Smith — aren't exactly ones for convention. Their music, which is a mix of Disclosure-style house and garage with classical flourishes of orchestral strings, might sound as opinion-dividing as chilli chocolate, but it's in fact proving to be a floor-filler.

So apparently you met porn star Ron Jeremy recently in the U.S. What kind of parties are you attending these days?
I have to be honest with you and say I'm the only one who went to bed before we met him. But it came about because Grace peeled off from the group and went to a nightclub on her own in L.A. I don't know what took her, but she's quite headstrong.

Is she the party person of the band?
Not particularly, but she's by far the bravest and by far the most confident. She ended up getting invited to some party at an amazing Beverly Hills mansion, so she rang everyone else [in the band] and partied with Ron Jeremy.

Did you take home some of the merch?
No merchandise, but I think one of our singers was left with a bite on her neck.

Would you do a backing track for one of his movies?
[Laughs] Maybe.

Speaking of making movies, Clean Bandit produces their own dangerous DIY music videos. Any close calls?
Yeah, because we do them ourselves there aren't any health and safety regulations involved in the way that there might be if it were done professionally. One of our friends built a wooden plank on top of his car and then Grace and I stood on it and played our instruments for the "Telephone Banking" video. We drove reasonably fast around the streets of East London near the Olympic Village. There were very few cars, but there were tree branches.

You hit a tree and fell off, didn't you?
I had a pole behind me and a belt around my waist and that was literally it. And yes, I did knock into a tree.

On struggling with everyday real-life situations

"To be honest, having a tour manager makes you more not used to dealing with real-life situations than Cambridge. You turn up in an airport and forget how to read a departures board." Neil Amin-Smith

The most distinctive aspect of this rootsy Seattle band's sound is the voice of singer Peter Quirk. It's weird, nasally and childlike, but it's also a bluesy, world-weary tenor. It doesn't feel like a natural voice, but more like a character he's doing, and it enhances the group's gospel-like, Americana vibe, as if these are songs by someone else, from some other era.

‘Guess’ what’s outdated

Review. The Huntington’s “Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner” offers laughs and strong performances, but not much newness.

Malcolm-Jamal Warner, right, acquits himself well as John Prentice.
PAUL MAROTTA

“Guess Who’s Coming to Dinner” plays like a rerun of a 1960s sitcom. You’ll laugh a lot, spend a few minutes thinking about how formulaic it was and tell your friends little, if anything, about the experience.

Aside from some new dialogue about boxing legend Joe Louis, nothing much is fresh about Todd Kreidler’s stage adaptation of the 1967 film.

Dane Laffrey’s set elicits appreciative oohs from the audience the first time it revolves to feature the terrace, but from the new angle, sight lines change, and some of the nonverbal jokes are hard to see. There are also intermittent sound issues resulting in indecipherable dialogue.

Lynda Gravatt, as the Drayton family’s domestic, gets all the best lines and dispenses Tillie’s witty observations with impeccable comic timing.

Malcolm-Jamal Warner (of “The Cosby Show” fame) delivers a solid turn as Dr. John Prentice. Another 1980s sitcom fixture, Julia Duffy (“Newhart”), is stellar as Christina Drayton, often eliciting uproarious laughter.

Will Lyman is especially good as liberal patriarch Matt Drayton, while Patrick Shea’s boozy Monsignor Ryan adds great levity to the production.

Lonnie Farmer and Adriane Lenox, sadly, have little to work with as the elder Prentices.

Exhibits. Donnie Wahlberg heads behind the camera for first show

Singer, actor, “Wahlburgers” star and now photographer? Donnie Wahlberg has teamed up with camera company Canon to showcase some of his own original photos as part of a pop-up art gallery at the Epicenter gallery. “I’m enjoying being a person behind the camera instead of the person in front of the camera,” says Wahlberg of his new interest.

You can see the photos by Wahlberg and others in a special one-day exhibit at Epicenter. As to what the former New Kid likes to photograph, Wahlberg says he’s inspired by his home city. He took one picture, of a little boy playing in the fountain at the Christian Science Center, because it reminded him of his own childhood, when he and his siblings used to play in public pools. “It just reminded me of my brother Mark, shirtless, with his diaper hangin’ out of his shorts, just playing in the water, and that was very reflective of our upbringing,” says Wahlberg.

Once upon a time, this could have been Mark Wahlberg. / DONNIE WAHLBERG

Visitors to the gallery also have the chance to win prizes, such as a camera or a PIXMA PRO printer, as well as signed prints from the photographers.

If you’re inspired to start taking your own photos, Wahlberg thinks Boston is a great place to take pictures. “I’d say the best thing about Boston itself is, most everywhere you go, there’s going to be something that’s aesthetically, if not pleasing, at least interesting, and everything is five minutes away from each other.” In other words, if your current neighborhood isn’t inspiring your shutterbug impulses, you’re only a few minutes away from a new opportunity. # Theater. The Bard heads to the ballpark

There's nothing quite like heading to Fenway in September. You put on a warm sweater, grab a hot dog and then settle in to watch the guy who played Voldemort in "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets" perform the "To be or not to be" scene from "Hamlet." What, that isn't what you normally do at Fenway?

Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's got you covered, then. The company is putting on what artistic director Steve Maler calls "an evening of Shakespeare's greatest hits. It's fantastic scenes from iconic Shakespeare plays — 'Hamlet,' 'Othello,' 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' 'Twelfth Night' — all in digestible bits."

Over the next couple of days while the Red Sox are out of town playing the Orioles, a stage is being constructed over the home field dugout to put on a special one-night-only performance of the Bard's hits. Expect to see a few familiar faces as well. In addition to Christian Coulson (the aforementioned portrayer of a young Voldemort), "Glee" dad Mike O'Malley will be there, as well as Neal McDonough, who you probably saw in "Minority Report" or "Captain America." Both are Boston natives.

According to Maler, all of the actors were pretty excited to get the chance to perform at Fenway. O'Malley can be seen performing in parts of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." "As soon as this idea of a performance at Fenway Park happened, he was right on board," says Maler.

With all the actors coming in from different places, some of the scenes won't actually be blocked out until Thursday night and Friday afternoon before the show. When asked how it will all come together in time, Maler laughs and says, "You know, it's an interesting question, and I will be able to tell you in full on Saturday morning, after it's over."

Horoscope

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22. Think outside the box. You will be pleasantly surprised by a new or unusual venture presented to you. Don't be afraid to try something new.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22. Slow and steady will be your best approach. You will be frustrated if you take on too many projects. Nothing will be accomplished if you don't pay attention to detail.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21. An unexpected change will result in an exciting venture. Find a way to incorporate the old and the new into your plans for the future, to suit your needs.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21. You will need to take good care of financial matters. A joint venture will have an unfavorable outcome. An in-depth look at your records will ensure that is overlooked.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20. A personal relationship will cause dissatisfaction. Don't get sidetracked. Once you are outside the workplace, you will have more time to do some soul-searching.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18. Social activities, love and romance are all highlighted. Don't be afraid to show your romantic side. An escape from your regular routine will contribute to a happier life.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20. Your compassion will shine in dealings with those you care about. Feel confident to enable beneficial changes to take place. Make a difference.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20. You are always ahead of the crowd. Don't be too hard on people who can't keep up. Showing patience and understanding will result in appreciation and admiration.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21. Aim high. Take an active role and see your commitments through to completion. A leadership position will be offered and will help get you where you want to go.

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20. Don't be dissuaded if others don't see things your way. Keep on top of your professional responsibilities. Maintain your focus, be diligent and accept the changes that lie ahead.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22. Avoid trouble. If you are too idle, you will end up stressing over personal problems that you cannot fix. Avoid emotional scenes by pursuing your own projects.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22. You can show generosity without opening your wallet. Offer your time and advice rather than money. Your financial situation will deteriorate if you are too free with cash. EUGENIA LAST

Blame is not helpful to victim

Re: 'Discourse on male victims distracts from Ray Rice issue' (Metro, Sept. 16) Knowing that men can be victims of abuse and that they are not taken seriously when they speak out is a valid point. Letter writers B. Mason and Scott Perry belittling, shaming and emotionally abusing letter writer Bryon Watson for saying so is not healing or helpful. As a recovering survivor of abuse, I know I can't control others. I was socialized to be the victim from an early age. I could blame others, or step up and take control of my own boundaries and change myself. This is what I choose to do. I hope both other abused men and abused women can find appropriate help to focus on healing themselves also. While anger may be legitimate, how it's processed is important and is key to my healing. Blame is not helpful for me. Also, none of us benefit when a person is tried in the media. Rules of evidence, challenging of witnesses and all the rules of court are necessary for justice to work. Remember this: Ray Rice is innocent until proven guilty, and if found guilty, is still only a sick person who might be doing very bad and even evil things. To deem someone bad or evil cannot help solve, fix or heal. Only the understanding that sick is sick, and the offering of treatment, can make things better. Societal rage is not conducive to victims becoming survivors. It's up to all parties involved in the abuse to seek recovery and become survivors.
LYLE ROY HULSHIZER, VIA EMAIL

Please help me understand our sick, disturbed world we live in. Donald Sterling former LA Clippers owner says something racist in the privacy of his home, and he is banned from the NBA for life. Forced to sell his team. Paula Deen mentioned the "N" word 20 years ago in retelling a story, and she is banished; her career is over. Ray Rice knocks out his wife in an elevator. He punched her so hard he could have killed her. People rally around him by sporting his jersey at Ravens games.

REBOUNDING FROM THE WEEK 2 INJURY BUFFET

If you made it to Week 3 without losing any players to injury, suspension or criminal proceedings, you're well ahead of the game.

The rest of us are running around like chickens with our heads cut off, trying to keep up with one of the craziest months in NFL history. The most actionable changes this week are due to running back injuries. Here's what to expect from three new starters:

Donald Brown is expected to see an increased workload with Ryan Mathews banged up. / GETTY IMAGES

Swimming in the Knile

This version of the Andy Reid offense is the most running back dependent scheme in the league — and it's not going to change now that Jamaal Charles is sidelined by an ankle injury. In the three games Charles has missed time in over the last two seasons, Knile Davis is averaging 27.3 touches per day and has scored six touchdowns. He has to face a very good Dolphins run defense this Sunday, but we know the workload is going to be there.

Chris Ivory 2.0

When watching Khiry Robinson run, you can't help but think of the violent tackle-breaking style Chris Ivory used to display in New Orleans. The difference between the two is that Robinson is a plus in the pass game. Now that Mark Ingram (hand) is out at least a month, Robinson is going to form a two-headed monster with Pierre Thomas and pick up the goal-line work that led to three Ingram touchdowns this season. With 10-14 touches weekly in this explosive Saints offense, the former UDFA is a top-30 fantasy running back for the next month.

'Damn it, Donald'

The Chargers gave Donald Brown a $10.5 million contract this offseason with this moment in mind. Ryan Mathews (knee) is out 4-5 weeks and this run-based attack needs a workhorse. Look for Danny Woodhead to mostly stay in his passing back role, leaving Brown to handle the majority of early-down and goal-line work. The guy Peyton Manning made famous with the "Damn it, Donald" line will have plenty of flex appeal thanks to a very soft upcoming schedule.

NFL matchups

Fire up these borderline players in Week 3.

- Stevan Ridley, RB, Patriots — A home game against the Triple-A Raiders is an obvious Ridley smash and pound spot. Bad news for Shane Vereen owners.
- Jared Cook, TE, Rams — In Week 1, Dallas got hit for two touchdowns by 49ers tight end Vernon Davis. In Week 2, Tennessee tight end Delanie Walker gave them an impressive 10-142-1 line.
- Jeremy Hill, RB, Bengals — A soft Titans front will leave enough room for both Hill and Giovani Bernard to eat on Sunday — especially if A.J. Green (toe) sits.

Pickups of the week

Here are the best adds for Week 3:

- Chargers D/ST: Will face Bills, Jags, Jets, Raiders and Chiefs over the next five weeks.
- Brian Quick, WR, Rams: Has 14 catches on 18 targets through two weeks.
- Kirk Cousins, QB, Redskins: His uneven 2013 performances were in the Mike Shanahan scheme built for Robert Griffin.

NFL. Patriots saying they don't take Raiders lightly

The Patriots are favored by a whopping 14 1/2 points over the 0-2 Raiders this Sunday (1 p.m., CBS), according to Bovada. Of course, that means that New England head coach Bill Belichick is acting as though Bo Jackson, Ken Stabler and Howie Long are coming to Foxboro this weekend.

"I think this team looks like the big, fast team that the Raiders have been known for," Bill Belichick said. METRO

Red Sox excited about Castillo

Rusney Castillo made his much anticipated Red Sox debut last night in Pittsburgh, batting seventh and playing center field, and Boston manager John Farrell is more than ready to unleash the Cuban star.

"He's an electric player with a lot of skills. He's explosive, quick-twitch," Farrell told WEEI. "We're looking forward to seeing him in this park." METRO

MLB. Umpire suspended after Papelbon incident

Phillies closer Jonathan Papelbon was suspended seven games by MLB for making an obscene gesture toward fans and for bumping umpire Joe West. But West is also getting some share of the blame from the ugly incident in Philly.

West was suspended one game without pay for initiating contact with Papelbon, grabbing his jersey, during a heated argument. METRO

Winston punished for outburst
Florida State quarterback Jameis Winston will sit out the first half of this Saturday's game against Clemson after he allegedly stood on a table near the school's student union and shouted an obscene sexual phrase. Winston was heard shouting the popular Internet phrase by dozens of FSU students. Winston was investigated in 2013 for sexual assault, but was not charged, and also found himself in trouble earlier this year for stealing $32 worth of crab legs from a grocery store.
